Author's Notes

Maybe there's a bit of an actor in all of us, wanting to get out there on stage and perform for our friends and families.

My earliest memories of acting, as such, would be when I was a young child playing 'dress-up' with my siblings. The young child is very creative; and with the right stimulation, encouragement and support can surprise you in many ways. I based the idea for the story on a children's book, 'The Little Blue Tractor', the author is anonymous. I took this story as the basic premise for a stage play by providing stage direction and ensuring that the English used would be at a suitable level for primary students.

With the valuable support of the English teachers, the students have spent some time learning about different animals - where they live, what they do and the strange sounds they make. So it seemed a fun idea to make a play that had lots of different animals in it, and what better place to find animals than a farm?

I have included short, enjoyable songs into the play and they are related to different animal characters. Their melodies may be familiar such as the common rhymes 'London Bridge Is Falling Down' or 'Twinkle, Twinkle Little Star', but the lyrics are newly adapted. With the help of the school's music teachers, students have come to learn and enjoy singing them.

The teaching team deserved to have credit for their dedication in designing and making the props, helping with dance and movement, organizing, arranging, planning and working with the students. The parental involvement in making and providing the costumes and make-up for the play is a perfect example of how the relationship with the school can be strengthened, and how to help the children's education.

I hope you will enjoy the show and encourage your child to be an active and inquisitive learner.
